

INTERNATIONAL EXPERIENCE COURSE GUIDE

Courses that address an international theme or that provide an international perspective are offered in many departments and programs. These include many courses that provide an experience abroad, ranging from semester-long to shorter-term study, and that are available at locations across the globe.

Learning in a global context reveals the mutual dependency of social, cultural, economic, and political systems, and demonstrates the significance of these complex networks for people's lives and the earth's sustainability. These courses facilitate cross-cultural competence and understanding by providing students with opportunities to engage with, learn about, and experience communities and populations that can be culturally and geographically different from their own. They promote critical attention to the implied assumptions that underlie cultural norms and traditions, and to the impacts of local actions on global communities.

International Experience courses possess one or more of the following attributes:

- Addresses an international or transnational theme, or uses an international comparative approach¹, as a principal objective of the course.
- Incorporates a critical global perspective as a significant part of the course (e.g., as an organizing theme, a key unit or module, or a major feature of the course).
- Facilitates cross-cultural competence and understanding through incorporating student reflection and/or other pedagogical strategies, employed in an international context.
- Is conducted, at least in part, outside the U.S.
- Foreign language education courses.

Further information on international education can be found by visiting the following pages: the Mario Einaudi Center for International Studies, Global Cornell, and the Office of Global Learning.

¹ International comparative approaches involve making comparisons and contrasts across two or more cultures, societies, or nations to identify similarities or differences that are generalizable or that lead to greater understanding and awareness (Hantrais, 1995).
